It's that time of year, art lovers. Winds are blowing, leaves are crunching and the streets are buzzing with talk of the newest art exhibitions. Autumn is officially upon us, and with the new season comes a barrage of stimulating art exhibitions that will make even the most serious summer devotees happy to watch the leaves turn.

After a summer of man-centric blockbuster shows from James Turrell, Paul McCarthy and Jeff Koons, fall yields a wonderfully diverse offering of artists, eras and media. Expect an archive of 20th century homoerotica, a survey of contemporary Arab and Iranian female photographers, and a sci-fi selection of Afrofuturist artworks, among others. To top it off, this season brings solo exhibitions from cult favorites Mike Kelley, David Lynch and Yoko Ono. What's not to love?

Enjoy the 25 exhibitions we can't wait to see this fall. There are clearly many shows we had to leave out, so be sure and leave your own suggestions in the comments section below.

WHAT: "Dissident Futures"
WHERE: Yerba Buena Center for the Arts, San Francisco
WHEN: October 18 –January 26, 2014
WHY: Trevor Paglen, Basim Magdy, Connie Samaras and The Otolith Group are some of the artists imagining our alternative futures, most exceeding our wildest expectations. "Loosely structured around three thematic strands—the utopian, the speculative, and the pragmatic—the exhibition furthers our understanding of how artists are addressing potentiality and the unknown, from the most desired future to the most feared."

The Otolith Group, YBCA
